

DOCUMENT RESUME

ED 291 665

SO 018 888

AUTHOR Merryfield, Merry M.
TITLE The African Social Studies Programme: An Effort to Improve Curriculum and Instruction across 17 African Nations. ERIC Digest.
INSTITUTION ERIC Clearinghouse for Social Studies/Social Science Education, Bloomington, IN.
SPONS AGENCY Office of Educational Research and Improvement (ED), Washington, DC.
REPORT NO ED0-SO-88-1
PUB DATE Jan 88
CONTRACT RI880-62-009
NOTE 4p.
AVAILABLE FROM ERIC Clearinghouse for Social Studies/Social Science Education, 2805 East Tenth Street, Suite 120, Bloomington, IN 47405.
PUB TYPE Information Analyses - ERIC Information Analysis Products (071)

EDRS PRICE MF01/PC01 Plus Postage.
DESCRIPTORS *Curriculum Development; Curriculum Enrichment; *Developing Nations; Foreign Countries; International Cooperation; *International Educational Exchange; International Relations; *Social Studies
IDENTIFIERS *Africa; *African Social Studies Program; ERIC Digests

ABSTRACT

This ERIC digest examines: (1) the origins and goals of the African Social Studies Programme (ASSP); (2) ASSP's organization and operation; and (3) ASSP's major achievements and current challenges. The ASSP is a non-political, non-profit intergovernmental organization of 17 African nations that stimulates, promotes, and monitors innovative curriculum. The ASSP evolved from two major meetings (Queen's College Oxford, England, September, 1967 and Mombasa, Kenya, August, 1968) of concerned African educators and representatives from the United States and English development agencies. The organizational structure of ASSP is a coordinating committee composed of one government-appointed representative from each member country and a six-member executive committee which works with the executive director. This committee is chosen by the coordinating committee to make decisions on its behalf. The major accomplishments of the ASSP center on its role in supporting national efforts within member nations to introduce, develop, and expand social studies education. Challenges for the ASSP are working within the constraints of scarce resources and overcoming the innate sensitivity of the social studies subject matter in developing nations. (SM)

* Reproductions supplied by EDRS are the best that can be made * * from the original document. *

ED291665

THE AFRICAN SOCIAL STUDIES PROGRAMME:
AN EFFORT TO IMPROVE CURRICULUM AND INSTRUCTION
ACROSS 17 AFRICAN NATIONS
ERIC Digest EDO-SO-88-1
January 1988
by
Merry M. Merryfield

ERIC Clearinghouse for Social Studies/Social Science
Education
2805 East Tenth Street, Suite 120
Indiana University
Bloomington, Indiana 47405

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION
Office of Educational Research and Improvement
EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES INFORMATION CENTER (ERIC)

☒ This document has been reproduced as received from the person or organization originating it.

☐ Minor changes have been made to improve reproduction quality.

• Points of view or opinions stated in this document do not necessarily represent official OERI position or policy.

SO018888

THE AFRICAN SOCIAL STUDIES PROGRAMME: AN EFFORT TO IMPROVE CURRICULUM AND INSTRUCTION ACROSS 17 AFRICAN NATIONS

by Merry M. Merryfield

As African nations achieved independence in the late 1950s and early 1960s they sought ways to change inherited educational systems to make them more suitable to the needs of new nations. "No courses in the curriculum were viewed as more closely tied to national aspirations than those dealing with the country, its people, and the responsibilities of citizenship" (Dondo, Krystall and Thomas 1974, 6).

By the late 1960s new approaches to inherited history and geography courses became known in Africa as "social studies." Eleven nations founded the African Social Studies Programme (ASSP), and continue to monitor the development of social studies curriculum and instruction in the continent. This ERIC digest examines (1) the origins and goals of ASSP, (2) ASSP's organization and operation, and (3) ASSP's major achievements and current challenges.

What are the origins and goals of the African Social Studies Programme? The ASSP is a non-political and non-profit inter-governmental organization of seventeen African nations that stimulates, promotes, and monitors innovative curriculum. In September 1967, concerned educators from eleven African countries (Botswana, Ethiopia, Ghana, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Tanzania, Uganda, and Zambia) met at Queen's College, Oxford with representatives of the U.S. Education Development Center (EDC) and the English Centre for Curriculum Renewal and Educational Development Overseas (CREDO) to discuss needs and priorities in curriculum development in Africa. Social studies was one of those priorities.

The fledgling organization wanted to promote curriculum development, research, and the development of new materials (Muyanda-Mutebi 1984, 2-3). ASSP would provide a core secretariat as a clearinghouse of ideas and would assist member states to organize national seminar courses, workshops, and conferences with both African and non-African educators. In order to work closer together, the participating nations agreed to meet the following year in Mombasa, Kenya.

Twenty-five African educators, seven British representatives, and six American representatives met at the Mombasa Conference of August 1968. There they addressed questions such as these: (1) What is social studies? (2) What should be the objectives in social studies education? (3) What approach should be used in teaching social studies?

The Conference concluded that a new approach based on integration of the traditional subjects (history, geography, and civics) and some elements from economics, sociology, and anthropology was needed.

Teaching methods were also to change. Inherited methods were criticized as didactic, passive, discouraging "the development of initiative, interest, excitement and joy of learning," focusing "the attention of the African child on a few abstract ideas that are usually unrelated to the economic activities, social aspirations, and political goals of his own people" (Report on a Conference of African Educators, EDC and CREDO 1968, 6).

In describing the role of social studies in a changing society, the Conference articulated three areas where social studies could make a contribution: "national integration," "problems of rapid economic development," and "the promotion of self-confidence and initiative based on an understanding of one's own worth and of the essential dignity of man" (1968, 9). An additional benefit of social studies was that children would become capable of coping with social change without despising traditional values and institutions.

Agreeing that one person from each African country represented would join an "Exploratory Committee," the participants thought it advisable to begin a process for exchanging information and mutual assistance. One year later the Exploratory Committee became the Coordinating Committee of the African Social Studies Programme, the organization that would take up where the Mombasa Conference left off and lead the social studies movement in Africa.

How is the ASSP organized and operated? The ASSP is organized by a Coordinating Committee composed of one government-appointed representative from each member country. These national coordinators are usually national curriculum developers, national inspectors, or university professors. An Executive Committee of six members is set up by the Coordinating Committee. The Committee works with the Executive Director and makes decisions on behalf of the Coordinating Committee. The Executive Director is responsible for day-to-day operations through the ASSP Secretariat in Nairobi, Kenya. The present Executive Director, Dr. Peter Muyanda-Mutebi, took office in February 1984.

The ASSP is funded by member states at the rate of $5,000 per annum in U.S. currency. Grants from private foundations, the Commonwealth Secretariat, and other sources have provided critical monies for conferences, workshops, and publications.

What are the major achievements of the ASSP? The major accomplishments of the ASSP center on its role in supporting national efforts within member nations to introduce, develop, and expand social studies education. Perhaps the most significant accomplishments of the ASSP have been its considerable efforts in bringing African nations together to define social studies and articulate its goals, content, and methods for Africa. Member nations agree that the "Social Studies Approach," or "ASSP Approach" as it is often called, has certain outcomes and methods.

Merry M. Merryfield has taught geography in Sierra Leone and carried out research on social studies in Kenya, Malawi, and Nigeria. She is currently a USAID consultant on social studies textbook development in Botswana.

ASSP stresses the study of the local and immediate before the study of the foreign and remote. This local emphasis is seen as a nation-building tool.

The skills and attitudes which develop through social studies teaching are those required by citizens in a free society. These skills are those of discovery (question-raising, observing, collecting, recording, classifying, and experimenting); of critical thinking (analysis and inference); and of problem-solving (planning, innovating, and decision-making). The attitudes expected of citizens are considered to be respect, appreciation, cooperation, and compassion.

ASSP stresses that these skills and attitudes can only be developed through participating in experiences which call for their use. Therefore, according to ASSP, social studies must be taught through Inquiry with students learning to ask and answer questions and solving their own problems.

ASSP also stresses that students need stimulation from a variety of media and the ability to express themselves through these media. Although ability to interpret and use the written word is important, it is also important to interpret interactions between people and the physical environment or the arrangement of a market or town.

The ASSP gives both educational legitimacy and hands-on technical aid to institutions and governments that are interested in social studies. The program has not only managed to bring together a cross-section of Africans to exchange ideas, materials, expertise, and personnel among participating member states, but it has also succeeded in the development of a common language in the social studies across the African continent.

The ASSP has sponsored a number of international, sub-regional, and in-country activities geared towards promoting the teaching of social studies. It also produces a variety of informative and useful teaching materials such as learning units on topics that cut across national boundaries in Africa.

As part of a review of ASSP effectiveness in the March 1985 Seminar, the Coordinating Committee identified several ways that the ASSP has influenced social studies in their respective countries. Thirteen coordinators presented evidence that ASSP has directly influenced national planning and policy with regard to social studies education. The methods most frequently mentioned were the conferences, meetings, and seminars whereby individuals carried back ideas and materials that affected policy and planning at the national level (ASSP 1985, 5-6).

A variety of informative and useful teaching materials have been produced by the ASSP. Examples are (a) sourcebooks for each member state as well as teacher's guides which go with each of these sourcebooks, (b) learning units on topics that cut across national boundaries in Africa, like "People are the Same" or "The Market," and (c) sourcebooks on "Population Education in Sub-Saharan Africa" (Muyanda-Mutebi 1984, 3-4). The African Social Studies Forum is an ASSP publication which encourages a smooth flow of information among its member states.

ASSP has not been without its problems. Largely dependent upon contributions of its member nations, ASSP is constrained by scarcity of resources. Although ASSP wishes to remain an organization of African states, it is often forced to turn to international donor agencies and Western countries for funding for major seminars, conferences, and curriculum development efforts. The priorities of these donors have influenced the agenda of the ASSP.

Other problems stem from the innate sensitivity of the social studies subject matter. Citizenship education, political education, population education, even the teaching of a nation's history have political implications and ramifications in contemporary Africa. A course on civics may become extremely controversial as leadership changes, a one-party state emerges, or coups d'état refashion the government.

The ASSP operates under a Coordinating Committee made up of governmental appointees from seventeen nations. The current member nations of ASSP are Botswana, Ethiopia, The Gambia, Ghana, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Tanzania, Uganda, Zambia, and Zimbabwe. Finding common ground and agreement for action among these nations requires flexibility and broad commonalities (Hawes 1979, 42; Merryfield 1985, 82).

NOTE: The African Social Studies Programme is interested in exchanging publications, educational materials, and ideas with American educators. Write the ASSP, P.O. Box 44777, Nairobi, Kenya.

References and ERIC Resources

Following is a list of resources, including references used to prepare this Digest. Those items followed by an ED number are in the ERIC system and are available in microfiche and/or paper copies from the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS). For information about prices, contact EDRS, 3900 Wheeler Avenue, Alexandria, Virginia 22304; 1-800-227-3742. Entries followed by an EJ number are annotated monthly in CJIE (Current Index to Journals In Education) which is available in libraries containing ERIC collections. EJ documents are not available through EDRS; however, they can be located in the journal section of most libraries using the bibliographic information provided below.

African Social Studies Programme. REPORT ON THE SEMINAR OF THE COORDINATING COMMITTEE OF THE ASSP, Nairobi, Kenya, March 4-9, 1985.

Dondo, Joseph M.C., Abigail Krystall and Dorothy Thomas. REPORT OF AN EVALUATION OF THE AFRICAN SOCIAL STUDIES PROGRAMME, 1974.

Howes, Hugh. CURRICULUM AND REALITY IN AFRICAN PRIMARY SCHOOLS. Essex, England: Longman Group Limited, 1979.

Merryfield, Merry M. SOCIAL STUDIES EDUCATION AND NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT IN SELECTED AFRICAN NATIONS. Unpublished doctoral dissertation, Indiana University, 1985.

Merryfield, Merry M. TEACHING ABOUT AFRICA. ERIC Digest No. 36, Bloomington, IN. ERIC Clearinghouse for Social Studies Social Science Education, 1986. ED 278 602.

Muyanda-Mutebi, Peter. QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ABOUT THE ASSP. Nairobi: The African Social Studies Programme, 1984.

Osunde, Egerton. "A Global Perspective in Social Studies Curriculum in African Public Schools." SOCIAL STUDIES 75:4 (July-August 1984): 149-152. EJ 303 475.

Quansah, Kofi B. BASIC TRAINING COURSE IN SYSTEMATIC CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT. COURSE ONE: GENERAL BACKGROUND TO CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT IN AFRICA. Nairobi, Kenya, 1983. ED 237 476.

REPORT OF A CONFERENCE OF AFRICAN EDUCATORS, EDC AND CREDO ON SOCIAL STUDIES, Mombasa, Kenya, August 19-30, 1968.

Yoloye, E. Ayotunde. "Dependence and Interdependence in Education: Two Case-Studies from Africa." PROSPECTS: QUARTERLY REVIEWS OF EDUCATION 15 (1985) 239. ED 324 507.

This publication was prepared with funding from the Office of Educational Research and Improvement, U.S. Department of Education, under contract R1880 62 009. The opinions expressed do not necessarily reflect the positions or policies of OERI or ED.